

This article shows some of the ways of using the facilitated workshop for projects...

Facilitated Workshop is group sessions that bring together the key stakeholders interdisciplinary cross-functional stakeholders to define the project or product requirements.

Here, individuals from various departments and various disciplines come together to discuss how the final output of the project will look like. It will also allow the various stakeholders to reach a consensus on how the final deliverables of the project will look like.

Facilitated Workshop helps the Project Manager to understand how various departments in the organisation view the project as well as when they expect to see by the time the project is finally concluded.

Facilitated Workshop help in building trust as well as fostering communication between the project chapter and other stakeholders that are involved in the project.
